

Dear Mr. Stokes,

Recent tragedies have changed our world, as well as renewed each person's appreciation for freedom and life. With that in mind, I ask that you end the suffering of animals in government laboratories for the sake of a test. Regardless of intelligence and life form, animals undergo the same pain as every human - we are, after all, from the same Earth. There is no justification in the brutality of these tests. I find the details provided about them disturbing, sad, and hard to read. It's just as hard to think that there are people who support these tests and don't care for the innocent victims sentenced to suffering because of such heartlessness.

Please discontinue or at least do anything in your power to discontinue these horrific tests. These aren't just statistics but living, breathing animals who feel and hate pain.

We always see it from our point of view, but there's a bigger picture. A much bigger picture. It's in everyone to have a conscience. I beg you, doctor, to show yours. Thank you so much.

Sincerely,

Janay Laing
